SECTION C: READING COMPREHENSION – 10 MARKS

Read the passage below carefully and answer all the questions that follow it. Answer in complete sentences.

Childhood obesity

Obesity among children has reached epidemic proportions in many countries. The World Health Organization (WHO,) says that about 22 million children under the age of five are overweight.

Childhood obesity is also extending to developing countries, According to the International Obesity Task Force, in some parts of Africa, more children are affected by obesity than by malnutrition. In 2007, Mexico occupied second place in the world, behind the United States, for childhood obesity. It is said that in Mexico City alone, 70 percent of children and adolescents are either overweight or obese. Pediatric surgeon Dr. Francesco Gonzalez warns that this may be “the first generation to die before their parents from the complications of obesity”.

What are the complications? They are diabetes, high blood pressure and heart disease. According to the U.S. Institute of Medicine, 30 percent of the boys and 40 percent of the girls born in United States in the year 2000 have a lifetime risk of being diagnosed with obesity-related type 2 diabetes.

Surveys show an alarming trend among children. Climbing rates of obesity are leading to climbing rates of high blood pressure. “Unless this upward trend in high blood pressure is reversed, we could be facing an explosion of new cardiovascular disease cases in young adults and adults,” warns Dr. Rebecca Din-Dzietham of the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta, Georgia.

What is behind this global epidemic of childhood obesity? While genetics can be a predisposing factor, the alarming increase in obesity in recent decades appears to indicate that genes are not the only cause. Although there are some genetic and hormonal causes of childhood obesity, most excess weight is caused by kids eating too much and exercising too little. Two examples illustrate the changing trend in eating habits today.

First, as working parents have less time and energy to prepare meals, fast food has increasingly become the norm. Fast-food restaurants have sprung up all over the world. One study reported that nearly a third of all the children in the United States aged 4 to 19 eat fast food every day. Such foods are typically high in sugar and fats and are offered in temptingly large sizes.

Second, soft drinks have replaced milk and water as the beverage of choice. For example, Mexicans spend more each year on soft drinks, particularly colas, than on the ten most basic foods put together. According to the book Overcoming Childhood Obesity, just one 600 milliliter soft drink a day can result in a gain of 11 kilograms in a year.

As to the lack of physical activity, a study carried out by the University of Glasgow in Scotland found that the average three-year-old engages in moderate to vigorous activity” for only 20 minutes a day. Commenting on that study, Dr. James Hill, professor of pediatrics and medicine at the University of Colorado, said: “The increasingly sedentary nature of United Kingdom children is not unique and is being seen in most countries around the world.
