One of the most valued products of teamwork is its efficiency. In teams, work often gets done faster. Perhaps this is because large tasks can be broken into smaller assignments that are then farmed out to individuals best suited for the job. Smaller tasks also require less time and brain power so they are less tedious to the people working.

Another benefit of using teamwork is that unique skills are combined and utilized effectively .Everyone has different strengths. In teams, different strengths from several people can be combined and used to benefit the whole team and make a better product. Combining different skills also leads to increased creativity.

Team work also strengthens relationships and builds unity. Relationships are important because they help people communicate better one another, and friendships continue to job satisfaction. Support systems will be stronger too because people will feel more comfortable relying on one another. Individuals will also develop a better sense of responsibility when they are part of a team because team members depend on one another for success.

When people have to work together, opportunities for team building are usually created, but not necessarily utilized .At work, people may be shy, bossy, independent or lazy and team building never really gets off the ground. A great way to practise the kind of team work that successful companies cultivate is to get your employees to develop good relationships between employees, a relax and fun environment can be just the catalyst you need to succeed.

As they interact and communicate with each other, leaders, individual strengths, a sense of belonging, team spirit and trust will develop .These elements can all help grease the gear of team work. Once a group of people have learned how to work, with one another and work together during play, it is much easier for them to employ the same skills in a company, school, or athletic environment.

If you are looking for fun team building, activities, choose activities that involve a lot of people and require those people to work together. Forming many different teams to create a little competition helps raise enthusiasm too. What might good team building include? Rope courses, relays, river rafting, sailing, scavenger hunts, rock climbing, etc This list is by no means ,exhaustive, but it provides good examples of activities where people rely on one another and where individual contributions influence of the whole .Team building can be really fun and the benefits of improving team work are certainly worth the effort.
