The Ngondo Festival takes place in Douala at the end of the month of November every year. It is the annual festival of the Sawa people of Cameroon. Several thousand people attend this popular festival every year. The festival include a Miss Ngondo Beauty Competition, a canoe race and the Jengu Ceremony.

Before the festival begins, there is a beauty competition. The lucky winner becomes Miss Ngondo. She dresses up in the traditional Kaba of the Sawa Ladies. She looks quite marvelous. She wears a fancy hat and she smiles beautifully too. She dances to the few steps of the assiko and makossa music of her people as she parades with the chiefs and dignitaries.

The canoe race is quite spectacular. Sawa villagers in the coastal area compete in the race. The villagers decorate their boat bright green, yellow, blue, red and white. The carved boats are long and have sharp points. Each boat can carry up to 70 men. The canoes start the race far out at the sea. They row their boat at incredible speed. They row rhythmically and in unison. The first boat to arrive at the ceremonial point is the winner. The winning village welcomes the heroes. They dance and sing very loudly and happily. The winners receive a cash prize.

The main attraction of the festival is the Jengu ceremony. This takes place in the Wouri River. First of all, a member of the Jengu Cult dives into the water to visit the underwater kingdom of the Miengu (plural of Jengu). Then he goes into the river with a sacred vase. He stays under the water for a long time. Finally, he comes out of the river and he gives the vase to the chiefs. The water contains a message from the ancestors. A Sawa myth says that when the man comes out of the river, his clothes are dry. The chiefs announces the message to their people. Children are not allowed to attend the ceremony.
