Read the following passage and then answer the question below it using your own words as far as possible.

Most of the young women in some areas of Moboland speak simple English but are unable to read and write. As children, they had no opportunity to go to school, but as time goes on, they are beginning to be interested in reading, writing English and French. "It is never too late to learn" said Aisha, a young lady from moboland. "People here used to think that women's education was important. For the people of my area, women ought to stay at home, do housework, get married, and have children".

"I have no time for such beliefs," Replied Mariam. "Those who say those things make me angry. Look at Mrs Egogo, the math teacher in our village school; she has no husband and earns her living very well. When you go to the city, you find so many women teachers, doctors, engineers, and even architects."

"Many families in my area are very poor," said Amera. When money is available for education, it is the boys who are first to have their fees paid. It is said that girls will soon get support from their husband."

"Look at my case: my father Adamou, has two children, a boy and me, and he could not have sent both of us to school because he is too poor. In addition, my mother is always sick and cannot take care of the home. So, my father needs me at home. What would you do if you were me?"

When a girl does not go through formal education, she cannot read a magazine, write letters, or read instructions on a medicine packet. If she wants to read or write a letter, she gets someone to do it for her. So, she has no privacy, since people know about her private life.

A new school for adult women is going to be opened in a village near moboland. The only entrance qualification for the school is the desire to learn. Mama Myriam, aged 45, has a lot of that! She says that her education will help her family. "I will never have problem with my husband because we both earn money and there will be peace in the family. Even when I have a good education, I will always obey and respect my husband" she concludes.
