The Red Cross

One of the greatest humanitarian organizations in history was founded on October 29, 1863 by Henri Dunant when he was horrified by the aftermath of the Battle of Solferino, fought in Northern Italy in 1859. He was travelling through the area and was shocked and horrified by the thousands of wounded soldiers left on the battlefield. As a result, he helped organize people from nearby villages to bring aid, water, and food to the wounded. Their nationalities did not matter to Dunant. A few years later he wrote about what he had seen and suggested for armies to train volunteers to help the injured from both sides during a war. In addition, he wanted the volunteers to have a guarantee of protection. He wrote to important leaders throughout Europe and convinced them of his plan. In 1863, an association in Geneva considered Dunant's idea and delegates from several countries attended a conference to discuss the plan and ultimately approved it. It was the official beginning of the Red Cross, and the humanitarian organization that would help many people throughout the world. The symbol of the Red Cross is a red cross on a white background, but in Muslim countries, the organization is called the Red Crescent with a different symbol. It was an international relief agency, but national agencies in other countries became affiliates of the group. In the United States, Clara Barton and a few other people she had known founded the American Red Cross in Washington, D.C. on May 21, 1881. She had first heard of the International Red Cross when she had visited Europe
