SECTION C. COMPREHENSION (10 marks)

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow

Proliferation of churches in Cameroon.

They often start in small houses, garages, dilapidating or uncompleted structures as prayer groups.

Suddenly, the founders and its foremost converts start using megaphones and other loud sounding gadgets to attract other "souls that need to be saved". Many of these "ministries" with some self-styled pastors, prophets, evangelists, bishops and other religious titles emanate from traditional religious denominations. Their mode of worship either angers those who say they want to have their peace or catches the attention of a sinner in search of salvation. Over the years, many of such church houses have mushroomed in many of Cameroon's major cities and towns, making inroads and luring away faithful of traditional denominations, whose mode of preaching has become insipid and, according to some Christians, boring. The Pentecostal churches are now competing with the so-called main churches and are pushing them to change their ritualistic ways of worship.

At the moment, it is unclear how many churches exist in Cameroon apparently due to the absence of data. But the government is now resolute on weeding out "illegal churches". Cameroon generally enjoys religious tolerance following the 1990 law on Freedom of Association. Since then, there has been a dramatic increase in the number of religious organisations in the country. In a society like ours where people face a lot of difficulties and are looking for easier solutions and miracles, Christians are abandoning their Roman Catholic or Traditional protestant faith to follow Pentecostal churches in which miracles are performed on daily basis. A pastor of one of such churches is quoted as having said in an interview: "There is nothing God cannot do, so we tell those without jobs that if they come to us, we will jointly pray with them to procure jobs. To the sick, they don't need the hospital because Jesus is the supreme Healer.

Catholic and protestant leaders have started criticizing these new churches. According to them, these new men of God do not preach the gospel. They deceive gullible Christians with fake miracles, often performed with diabolic means. The consequences of this are disastrous in our society. First, people do not longer value the Church. Secondly, miracles seekers become preys for extortionist pastors and thirdly, family are being divided. Pentecostal churches on their part maintain that all they preach and do is Biblical. They also hold that, all who oppose and criticism them are merely persecutors foretold by the Bible.

Many people in our society say they have no problem with the proliferation of churches provided that the good message is preached. Miracles exist but people should not forget that the most important thing is the word of God and its importance in believers' life. Other persons do not believe in such churches and complain that they are merely religious businesses.
